A WOMAN'S CONFESSIONAL

By HELEN WOLJESKA

This little purple book contains the history of a woman's inmost life, told in a running fire of sparkling epigrams.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

The intimate thoughts of a brilliant and erratic creature. The philosophy of a mind unusually free and untrammeled, brave and truthful.—Detroit Journal.

Suggestive of Ralph Iron's Story of an African Farm. Here as there the pages abound with sentiments of revolt and passionate cynicisms, with the intolerance of recognized law and civilization, with the pagan yearning for a Deity, only possible as expressed in nature. Decidedly an interesting book.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

An odd little bundle of wit and wisdom, folly and pathos—always with the shadow of the erratic over the author's brilliant intellect. Some of these epigrams are glorious. All are honest. And serve to strip a human soul bare to thoughtful eyes.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Ultra-revolutionary, æsthetico-moral, stimulative . . . and revelative of an interesting woman behind it.—St. Louis Mirror.
